the shaft. At 7 o'clock Gorman came down to place the dynamite. Gorman was in charge of much of the blasting of the New York subway, and is considered an expert in this line.

It is a rule with the contractors and their men that all electric lights shall be disconnected when the dynamite is to be done. As the employment of non-union men was an oversight that was discovered too late to be corrected."

When a good man dies the community in which he lives, as well as his family and friends, sustain loss, and such loss came when, on the 25th of November, 1966, after seventy-three years passed in this, the city of his birth, Samuel Cross-fell asleep.

During the many years in which he was engaged in active business he so bore

During the many years in which he was engaged in active business he so bore himself toward all with whom he came in contact as to win esteem and confidence. He was an honest man—in word and action—a brave man; a true man. The duties of every position filled by him were discharged with intelligent ability, and his charming personality made it a pleasure to transact business with him. Whilst esteemed and popular with all, he was bound by ties of devoted love to those friends who knew his true inner worth, and by the needy and unfortunate recipients of his generosity and unpaid-for services. No one could be with him and look into his open face and clear eye without knowing that he was a man who spoke directly from his heart and without concealment. out concealment.
